the decorations from the various public and private buildings of the city. The taking down of the bunting was no doubt hastened by the overhanging clouds, which threatened to give further showers last night. Confederate flags still hang triumphantly from the cross wires of the car company, and the spectacular decorations along the route of the paratle still float in the wind.

Lost Their Tickets.

Lost Their Tickets.

A large number of the visitors called at headquarters before leaving the city, and the business of yesterday was much interrupted by the hospitalities of the day. A number of small matters had to be straightened out by the officials, including making provision for several others as suspicious characters, return, tickets, and were practically stranded in Richmond. Investigation was given to each case, and wherever it seemed necessry home transportation was provided. Though there have been a number of reports of lost tickets and lost pocket-books, and in some cases of robbery, there has been considering the size of the crowd, comparatively little pocket-picking. Two hard-looking citizens, who could give no reasonable account of themselves, were run out of Camp Gordon on the opening day, and the police have held sevral others as suspicious characters.

There is no definite way of estimating the great concourse of people who witnessed the unvelling of the Davis Monument, but all authorities agree that it was by all odds the largest crowd ever assembled in Richmond on a similar occasion. General Stephen D. Lee, an expert in such matters, places the number at from 125,000 to 150,000. On the memorable day in 1890, when the R. E. Lee Monument was unveiled, there were a much larger number of survivors of the Army of Northern Virginia berg editions the results of the color of the provided from First Page.)

the R. E. Lee Monument was unvelled, there were a much larger number of survivors of the Army of Northern Virginia here, although it is probable that the Army of the Tennessee and the Trans-Mississippi had as many men in line on Monday as on that memorable day. At the Lee unveiling there was sake a much larger military section of the parade than on this occasion, the monument being to a military here.

But the great feature of the unveiling was the outpouring of people—beople from everywhere, people who lined the streets through which the precession marched, and people who packed into a dense mass for more than a block in every direction on the presented as a lock in every direction on the people ground the monument.

After the occasion of the Lee unveiling, the railroads entering the city reported the sale of about sixty thouse and special round-trip tickets. The commodations have doubled.

Marylanders Arrive.

Arriving at the exposition to-day, with its band playing "Maryland, My Maryland," were the veterans of the accompanied by many ladies. They came here from Richmond by the way of West Point, where they boarded a steamer for the Exposition Grounds. Marylanders will be quarrered with lier, the tune of the band was changed to "Dixlo." After they had been given a rousing reception, the little army of invaders—handsome and substantial-looking etitzens and striking women, mostly from Baltimore—lined up in front of tile hotel dosk-to register, Major Frangin P. ## CAUSE BIG FLURRY IN COTTON MARKET

False Report from Washington Creates a Panic—How Fortune Is Made.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

NEW YORK, June 4—Whether by a cleverly preconcerted plan, or by just plain, every-day obtuseness, government, crop experts to-day threw the New York cotton market into one of the wildest paroxysms it has witnessed in many a day. Within twenty minutes after the publication of the report the market had broken 30 points, or $1.50 a bale, but recovered the same amount covering a fluctuation, therefore, of $3 on a 500-pound bale.

Opinion was divided as to whether somebody in the Cotton Burcau, at Washington, had profited by the incident. The report was expected at moon, but just before that hour a telegram was received from Washington that it would be delayed until 12:15 c'clock.

On the minute Superintendent King advanced to the rostrum and read the official timesteb. For a few mounts was received from Washington that it would be delayed until 12:15 octock.

On the minute Superintendent King advanced to the rostrum and read the official dispatch. For a few moments pandemonium reigned. While the excitement was at its height, Superintendent King again mounted the rostrum, rapped for order, and amid breathless excitement, read a contradictory dispatch from the Agricultural Department. In a moment the market was in a wild panic again. The bears rushed to cover and within ten minutes the market had advanced over thirty points, regaining all of its losses. The gain of 4,000,000 acres had been whipped out, and the condition of seventy looked small enough on an acreage the same as last year, when the condition was 84.6.

On Morday night a group of cotton operators formed a pool for quick action on to-day's report. When the first dispatch was printed the poel members jumped into the ring and covered 200,000 short hales, and went long on numbers of about $300,000.
